Prophecies Belleved-Gruesome and Unpublished Legends Illustrating the Power of Several Mysterious Women.

[New York Herald.] The superstitions of the old Colonial nes still survive in the mountains of Virginia. I do not refer to the Voudoo of the colored people, but to the iefs that are common among the white folks of the region. Among the Alle-"witcheraft celebrates pale Hee's offerings," and within easy-reaching distance of Fincastle there are a number of withered hags who less than a century ago withered hags who less than a century ago would have been burned at the stake for the black arts they are supposed to practice. They are reputed to be witches and to meet one of them at midnight would appall the bravest inhabitants.

At least two of these women belonged to fine families in the long ago, and were noted for their beauty and their jewels. In the olden time witcheraft was not confined to the Furitans of New England. Princess! Anne Courthouse, a little village southeast of Richmond, Va., witnessed the ducking of Grace Sherwood in the waters of Lynnhaven bay for witcheraft. The belief in witches has never died out in this vieinity.

A favorite name of the Virginia witch is Bally—due to the fact, probably, that one Rally Slate achieved great fame in this region years ago through her infernal arts. She was guilty of many ugly tricks before the turned old Casar—her neighbor's hired man—into a horse and went foraging upon his brawny back. He was a strange negro from Georgia. He had never heard of Sally Slate.

SHE HAD A BED BEARD.

But the very night he arrived at his new home he was visited by her, so he declared when daylight came. "Bress Gawd, massa," said he in relating his adventure, massa," said he in relating his adventure,
"an old 'oaman, wit' red beard an' a hump on her back came to me las' night. 'Git up,' she ses, an' up I hopped. Den she straddled my back.an' I went a pacin' off sech as I never seen no hos do atore. She rode me into a co'n-fiel', an' we didn't stop for no fence, but trabbled up a shaft o'

Of course he was allowed a holiday.
Lidy Hughes, a noted witch, yet lives in a destitute condition at the county poorhouse, She has a son moderately well to do, but disclaiming her because of her witchcraft.

soap did its best to odorize the country. Then suddenly the witch was heard to yell, and upon running to her it was found that the kettle, firestones, and all the apparatus were sizzling in the bottom of the creek, while old Lidy cried with all a witch's agony that she was burned, burned. There was not a drop of hot scap on her clothing. The matron assured me with all the candor she could summon that Lidy positively had no sign of a burn. Lidy positively had no sign of a burn.

Yet her back and limbs were badly in-SHE CAN PRIGHTEN ANIMALS.

Even the animals on the poor farm are reported as afraid of Lidy. She can scatter a whole flock of sheep in a field by merely standing in the cabin loor and pointing her oaken cane at them The paupers fear her more than death.

The whole county can testify to a strange power she possesses and to the peculiar influence she has over the ignorant.

The Virginia witches are poor, scant-garbed, hunger-crazed creatures. They are usually of bearded chins and otherwise hideous. That they possess power unu-sual to the human being is without doubt. Perhaps it is, after all, an undeveloped, unconscious germ of the occult science.

Perhaps it is, after all, an undeveloped, unconscious germ of the occult science yet to be explained away.

But here is one illustration that scarcely comes under any science yet named. Sally Friddly, living on Potts's creek, Alleghany county, furnishes her neighborhood with a striking story. It is rather hard to say that the story is believed, but so it is, for the credulity of the mountaineer in certain directions is altogether limitless.

Sally Friddly keeps behind her closet door a tow linen towel. It has hung there for forty years all told.

Now, when Sally Friddly wants a neighbor's cow to yield to her own milk-pail, she puts into said rail a silver dollar—it may be the rare dollar of 1804. Then she goes to the tow linen towel and repeats some such jargon as this:

The milk for her, The cream for me. Saw, Brownie, saw.

Or "Saw, Daisy," or any name her neighbor's cow may possess.

She always gets the cream! She is very considerate, and does not take milk from one cow oftener than once in every two or three weeks. This enables everybody to fare alike.

THEIR MEDS WELL SALTED.

There are a great many people whom I know—both white and colored—who never go to bed on a windy night without first sprinkling salt around their beds. This keeps the witches out. Another protection is to set up a knife, fork, and spoon at the head of the bed, and then, so say the sufferers, one can see the witch that visits one and tell exactly who it is. Placing bent pins in the track of a reputed witch is another method of proving witcheraft. If upon returning in the same tracks she limps then the pins have struck home in their uneanny mission, and she is a witch.

The stories of modern witches are legion, and they are much more tangible pictures than these of Guera Annièr return and they are much more tangible pictures than those of Queen Ame's reign.

Albert Lynch, a respectable and reliable colored man, tells of a night in a lonely old-field school-house, where a witch held an orgy over his body and called in to her serious community. as ergy over ins body and cancel in to her assistance a queer and curious community of unknown creatures, that danced by the light of fox-fire, and at the first roulade from the chanticleer the witch and her retinue skedaddled up the wide old chimney-mouth! We can explain this by calling it a dream or the workings of a restless, undisciplined here.

A poor man lost his coat. He could illy afford such a loss, for he had no other. All through the summer it was searched for and when fall came and he felt the need of it he walked a few miles to hear what Ann could tell him about it.

"It hangs in a dark place, upon a knife stuck in the wall," she read from her wonderful book.

Upon renewed search it was found at the house of his sister-in-law, and sure anough it hung upon the butcher-knife behind the closet-door. The sister-in-law

So the grand old books were given away. some were burned. The beautiful clock that had chimed out its notes in the "Fa-deriand" and in the old mansion for more than a century was sold for a five-dollar greenback! And then the court came in for a turn, and Ann lost the weatherbeaten

QUARRELS WITH GHOSTS.

Mrs. Roland, connected with very respectable people, and now old and feeble, has been for years considered a witch. Ignorant persons so consider her. Others say she is a living representative of his dark and awful majesty.

It is said she quarrels as fiercely with the ghosts of her mother and sister upon their frequent visits as she ever quarrelled with them in the flesh.

A little boy told me that when he built fires for Mrs. Roland a few years ago she told him to "set a chair quick for Lucy" upon one occasion.

You only come back to hear yourself rustle in silk, you proud hussy, and Satan can have no revenge, because you burned yourself up here! "A great many times," said the child, "would she thus receive her ghostly visitors. Sometimes they would come to look over the family jewels, and then there'd he a great fuss, because certain of Mrs. R.'s relatives robbed her, and she acquainted Lucy with the fact. Once Lucy siapped the witch's jaws, the sound of which the boy heard distinctly, and the red print of a hand showed plainly on the pallid old cheek.

She also has been shot by proxy with a silver bullet for the death of a cow. Her neighbor drew upon paper, with juice of the proon root, and with the art of a skilled mountaineer, Lidy Hughes's portrait. This he tacked upon a beech-tree in the woods where the cow died, and upon shooting the portrait with a silver bullet Lidy next day appeared very lame in the hip-joint.

ONE KISS BEFORE PARTING-

portrait with a silver bullet Iady next day appeared very lame in the hip-joint. She is lame yet from the silver bullet. Sometimes her evil genius gets angry with her, as it did when she stirred a soapkettle not long ago. The matron of the infirmary left her in charge of the kettle, which was boiling at its highest, out under the sycamore-trees on the creek bank. For a few minutes all went well, and the soap did its best to odorize the country. Then suddenly the witch was heard to yell, and upon running to her it was found sentimental title, and had sent out to her carriage a whole portmanteau full of "love"—going through every mood of the feeling, past, present, or future—and was following their example when she paused upon the step as if meditating whether she should take it or some other step that was evidently turing their own in her was evidently turning itself over in her

He could doubt no longer! Springing over the counter he seized hold of the lady's fair form, and then and there gave the kiss she so earnestly begged for previous to departure. To his great astonishment the only return the lady gave was a box on the ears. This was followed by a volley of blows dealt by her parasol over his head, which was accompanied with an equal number of shrieks, that never terminated till the police came into the shop.

The affair was carried to the nearest police court but was soon dismissed upon its being explained that One Kiss Before being explained that "One Kiss belofe Parting" was the name of a song which the unsophisticated shopman, blissfully green from his native fields, had never heard of before. It is a favorite joke atterward to ask the lady whenever she was at the piano, if she would mind giving just "One kiss before parting."

A WELL-EDUCATED PRINCE. What Has Been Taught the Czarewitch Since His Ninth Year.

The Russian Crown Prince, to whom the eyes of the world have been drawn by the recent attempt at assassination in Japan, is probably the best educated man of his years in the world. For thirteen years the most celebrated instructors in the empire have done their all to develop the elementary training with which, in his ninth year, he came into their hands. The Czarewitch has labored as industriously to learn as they have to teach. He has, moreover, got an amazingly minute and accurate knowledge of the geography of the great land of the Romanoffs, for since he has been old enough to observe for himself, he has accompanied his father and mother on all their longer tours in European Russia. The third gown is worn by the young mother when she receives the relatives and friends who have come to offer their congratulations to her and their gifts to her first-born child. Debutant, bride, and mother! A lwoman may be all these, and in America she frequently is something more—a divorce. Here frocks are not important factors, and I am irresistably reminded of a trunkful of dresses I saw last week which are to play a prominent part in a big divorce case soon.

"What a heap of pretty frocks," I said.

"Yes." my friend replied. "Horribly expensive, and I couldn't well afford them, either, but business is business, you know, these are my stock in trade. They're very sympathetic gowns, I must say. The designer caught my idea perfectly."

The unanimous opinion of the miners and speakers was that they should not strike or refuse to work under the old terms, but should let the operators be the first to stop work, if it was to be stopped at all. The miners as well as the operators are anxious to see the laws tested, and Judge Ferguson and General Watts promise to stand by the laws and have them tested as speedily as possible. They as well as the miners are confident the laws will stand.
